The pathological tumor response to preoperative chemotherapy is reported to be a good prognostic factor in patients with stage II and III colon cancer. Because up to 90% of patients with stage III disease have a complete pathological response, it is necessary to clarify whether there are patients with stage III colon cancer in whom preoperative chemotherapy can be avoided. We examined the clinical and pathological responses in stage III colon cancer and their prognostic significance. In this study, we retrospectively examined the pathological responses to preoperative chemotherapy in 215 patients with stage III colon cancer treated at the Cancer Institute Hospital. The survival rates of the patients with complete pathological response and pathologically evaluated partial response were significantly better than those of the patients with no pathological evaluation (p

Plaintiff further asserts that the six landmen should be included because of the percentage of their pay which was held in trust. Since we have found that the owners of the land have not been treated as tenants in common, this argument is without merit. If it were true that the landmen were tenants in common then, of course, the trustees should pay the entire six percent of their share to the six landmen. But, the trustees have been treating the landmen in a different manner, as we have explained above. With respect to the amount of the judgment, which is claimed to be excessive, we have found that each of the defendant trustees paid $60,000 of their share of the purchase price and should, therefore, pay $120,000, or four times the amount claimed. It is stated in the appellees' brief, "There are no other sums due." The judgment is affirmed in part and reversed in part. toy. One of the features I use is the 8x8 square grid that can be mapped as an 8x8 array. So I map each square in the array as an object of a class that exposes whatever I want on that square's index. Some of the standard data: 0: SquareIndexed 1: SquareIndexed 2: SquareIndexed This makes it easy to create an 8x8 grid with different classes on each 2edc1e01e8
