Photos and full-screen still image viewing are incredibly easy in Lightroom, and the new sorting options let you quickly select photos using the new artificial intelligence technology, which is optional. The menus have been moved to the top of the screen for a more eye-level view, and the buttons and labels have been repositioned to be more intuitive. Cropping and adjustments for photos can be done in half the time, and you can now make changes to lens corrections and RAW file profiles regardless of whether the files were taken with DSLR or compact cameras. You can make a black/white or Sepia copy of your image with just a couple of clicks, and you can crop objects from a scene quickly to keep them in proportion. If you apply a standard-format profile in the | Apply to All | tab, you can import it into JPEG or TIFF files to have them appear properly in different formats, and you can better export your work for social or promotional reasons. Lightroom provides several new features to help manage your workflow, let you retouch your work outside of Photoshop, and more. I of course used the new Adobe Portfolio application that comes with Lightroom. It's a great tool for letting you share photos through Twitter and Facebook—and connect with buyers through a social feed, e-mail, or even from within an ad. The new Share on social networks feature lets you upload to Facebook, Twitter, and via the Lightroom mobile app. You also get a great e-mail feature: You can create a series of e-mails that point your viewers to a page on your site. This is a handy way to promote your business or your portfolio—and it's a great space to post links for discounts or webinars.
